

Cotting-Smith Assembly House

This 1782 Federal-style building was constructed to house social gatherings and artistic performances. In 1796 Samuel McIntire, one of the country's preeminent Federal-period architects and woodcarvers, remodeled it, adding a new facade with Ionic pilasters. This is where George Washington, in a celebratory mood shortly after being elected president, danced and dined. It is ideal for small gatherings, with four furnished museum-quality period rooms in which to gather. Weather permitting, the garden, with its brick patio and picturesque trellis, is part of the rental. A second-floor sitting/changing room is also available for rental.
